

"Electra" Next Play At Greek Theatre

First American appearance of the Greek Tragedy Theater Company of Athens, which will feature Sophocles' immortal "Electra" for five performances in the Greek Theater of Los Angeles at 8:30 Tuesday through Saturday nights, September 5 to 9.

The Greek Tragedy Theater gives the celebrated play according to the ancient traditions that have survived 3,000 years. Traditional, too, are the massive setting and the flowing robes of the actors, all famous for their authentic interpretations. "Electra" itself is among the most important plays of all history, a moving and dramatic work that has held spectators spellbound for thirty centuries.

The art of the theater was born in Athens some 3,000 years ago and was developed from ceremonies in honor of Dionysus, or Bacchus. Its name comes from the Greek word "theatron," meaning to see, or to view.

Sophocles, who lived from 496 to 405 B.C., expanded the earlier form to take advantage of additional characters and endowed his dramatic works with the power of mature philosophical reflection and the beauty of his exquisite sense of style.

Throughout his work, Sophocles taught that there is a Divine Order in nature to which even his pagan gods must bow. Man, although subject to this destiny, is endowed with free will and his sins, particularly that of pride, bring in their wake an inevitable retribution.

Circus Coming To Town

The circus, Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey's of course, is coming to Los Angeles Wednesday, September 20, and will continue at the Sports Arena through Oct. 1.

More than 100 aerialists, including the Flying Gibsons, and the Rockets, will be among the entertainers.

A special feature will be a mid-air extravaganza, "Anchors Aweigh," with 30 aerialists executing in 40-foot high precision the leaps, turns and spins of ballerinas.

Another act will be a musical production, "Out of This World," which cost $300,000 to produce.

Performances will be given twice daily, with three on Saturdays. Tickets may be ordered through the Sports Arena, 3939 S. Figueroa.

Relax! If you failed to pick up that Magic Chef Special during the week, pick it up any day of the week. That's right. Weekend specials stretch at Magic Chef.
